Turks and Mahometans

Presence and Perception in Early Modern England

Jyotsna G. Singh

English encounters with Islam in Mughal India

Matthew Dimmock

Mahometans Invoking Mahometanism in Early Modern England

Matthew Dimmock is Professor of Early Modern Studies at the University of Sussex and Co Director of the Sussex Centre for Medieval and Early Modern Studies. His work focuses on perceptions of difference in Early Modern England and he has published widely on this topic, with particular emphasis on Islam, including Mythologies of the Prophet Muhammad in Early Modern English Culture (CUP, 2013). He was a textual editor for the 3rd edition of the Norton Shakespeare and is currently working on the Oxford Hakluyt and Thomas Nashe projects. His forthcoming monograph is titled Elizabethan Globalism.

Eva Johanna Holmberg

Slaves of the Sultan: Perceiving the Non-Muslim peoples of the Levant

Dr Eva Johanna Holmberg is the author of Jews in the Early Modern English Imagination (2012). She has published articles on early modern English travel writing, cross-cultural encounters, ethnic definition and racialization in Studies in Travel Writing, Journeys and Renaissance Studies. She is currently completing her second book, a study of early modern English perceptions of Levantine non-Muslim peoples. Her next major research project funded by the Academy of Finland Research Fellowship in 2016-2021 will explore life writing and self description in seventeenth-century English history and culture.